(Note: Save your graded Prospectus to turn in with your Final Paper during Week 10)

What is a Prospectus?

The prospectus is the plan for your final paper and contains, in paragraph form, all of the elements of the final paper. It is probably the most important, and often the most difficult, portion of the writing assignment. Its purpose is to begin organizing your research into the proper format; to begin formulating your thesis, counter/alternative argument(s), and rebuttal; and to begin planning how you will be using your sources to supply evidence along the way.

Your Prospectus should include:

- An introduction to your topic
- An explanation of the problem/question you are addressing (explicitly state your research question)
- Your thesis and evidence used to support it
- An introduction to each of the scholarly interpretation(s) you will be using (argument, counter-argument(s)/alternative argument(s)) and evidence used to support it
- Rebuttal(s) or weakness of the above argument(s). This can also be an explanation about why you find one (set of) argument(s) most convincing over others.
- Conclusion and explanation of the significance of your research
- Works Cited Page (no annotations)
- Photocopies of each page of text from which you cite and a photocopy of the title page of each source you list in your Works Cited page. You must label each page with the author's name and page number, and you must highlight the words/phrases you are citing.

Sources

Your Prospectus must cite and utilize each of the minimum six (6) required sources, including:

- at least 1 primary source
- at least 1 scholarly journal article
- Course material will not count in the minimum six required sources

Formatting

Please consult the Model Prospectus, the MMW Style Sheet, and Raimes', Keys for Writers for specific MLA and formatting requirements. Deductions will apply to all MLA and formatting errors.
